

Ethanol fight far from over

Contrary to the impression your paper tried to create, the stink over ethanol is far from over.

The Ministry of the Environment's (MOE) position wasn't remotely surprising. They've said all along that the location of this ethanol facility rests with the municipal level of government.

I just question what's the point in inviting public comment when they give the impression that it won't even matter. The opinions of over 1,500 residents of this community are far from insignificant.

What was encouraging about the council meeting was seeing the voracity with which our city councillors were asking pertinent and controversial questions of the MOE.

This is a municipal zoning issue. And our councillors are listening to their constituents and finally willing to stand up for their rights to a healthy, clean and safe community.
